HISTORIC JACK LONDON SQUARE

Named after the famous author who lived in the city of Oakland in the late 1800's, Jack London Square has become a well-loved and popular destination for locals and visitors. Jack London is best known for the novels he wrote about the Alaskan wilderness: The Call of the Wild, White Fang, and The Son of the Wolf. History of the region can be found at the Jack London Museum, Oakland Museum of California, Ebony Museum and the Museum of Children's Art located in or around Jack London Square. A unique National Historical Landmark, Roosevelt's USS Potomac known as "The Floating White House" is berthed at the north end of Jack London Square.

All events, attractions, shopping, and dining at Jack London Square are within easy walking distance to the Ferry's Clay Street Pier. Local farmers display their seasonal best for the Farmers Market on Sundays. Shoppers can also enjoy the over twenty specialty shops conveniently located in the Jack London Square area. Cinema 9, a 9-plex movie theater, Yoshi's World Class Jazz House, plus 15 other restaurants to choose from all with exceptional dining, many offering breathtaking views of the waterfront. Jack London Square offers a wonderful waterfront atmosphere for spending the day.
